HARVEST INDIA

OUR STORY

In 1965, a nurse named Lalitha Kumari discovered that millions of people lived in remote villages with no access to medical care. So she quit her stable nursing job in a hospital so she could walk from village to village to serve people in need and provide them with medical care. But she realized that this wasn't enough. Lalitha started bringing books with her on these treks so she could also teach people to read. Lalitha's compassionate response has since grown into a global movement driven from the grassroots to champion India's forgotten poor. We meet everyday practical needs, offer education that creates future opportunities, and creates havens of stability for those without a home. Together, we provide not only practical, urgent care—but also the embrace of family. Because charity doesn't break cycles; belonging does.
